TURNING THIS INTO THIS
No, it was not made to take a bath, the same process as if the village fell sick.

The temple was located on the top of a hill. Slate. The temple had one main temple and several smaller temples. People would go there regularly to worship the statues and enjoy the festivities of the season. For us kids, we would play and run around while the adults did whatever they wanted to. One tradition was to have a bonfire every year. The temple was usually busy with a fair in the evening, a chance to sing and dance while the adults did whatever they wanted. Sometimes, there would be a special festival where the statues were brought out and decorated with flowers and lights. The village would come together to celebrate the occasion.

In Tirilaghat, the entire village came together, the villagers with ropes to pull the chariot with the idols. It was massive, and the villagers spent several months preparing it. The procession that comprised the village each celebrated its own religious festivals, and the devotions of the different gods took special pride in the processions and activities. It was during these festivities that folk would come together to enjoy the holiday foods and activities. There were festival days when we would have leftover food, another when people fasted for Krishna, the incarnation of Lord Vishnu, present in another—Holi—people showered each other with colors.

Craft - Supplies:

- Coloured paper
- Eyes and cheeks from handy punch
- Pencil
- Glue
- Scissors
STEP 1: Prepare penguin template

To get the penguin template, use the pencil to draw the following shapes on black, orange and white papers respectively and cut out each shape neatly.

On the black paper, trace the outer shape of the penguin and the flippers.

Then the inner penguin shape should be trace onto the white paper.

Finally trace the small triangle that will be the beak and the penguin's feet onto the orange paper.

Cut out each shape from the coloured craft papers.
Paste them one by one.....
